's to Majnum: the evolution of a Sufi allegory from 'Udhri roots to Sufi allegory'

TOWARDS THE END of the 12th century of the common era,¹ the Persian poet Abu Muhammad Nizami of Ganjah, whose proper name was Ilyas son of Yusuf son of Zaki, composed the third masnavi or long poem in rhymed couplets of his Khosra ('Quintet') also known as the Persi Gasi ('Five Treasures'). This masnavi, entitled Layli u Majnum, was apparently written in the space of four months; quite a feat considering it contained more than 4,000 verses.² It was dedicated to the Sharwan Shah Akhmed Khan of Shavaz, 'the region in the eastern Caucasus where Nizami lived'.
The king sent a letter to Nizami requesting that he compose a poem 'like a hidden pearl' about Layla and Majnum and dedicate it to him, and, like the Shah's own letter, it was addressed to 'the most beloved of all'. Nizami had been asked to compose a poem about Layla and Majnum and dedicate it to him, and, like the Shah's own letter, it was addressed to 'the most beloved of all'. Nizami found himself disconcerted; he did not have the courage to translate the king's letter but could not see a way to tell the story in full, until his son Muhammad bin Nizami put a manuscript of the story of Layla and Majnum in his father's hand and consoled him and encouraged him to write the romance.³

Although it reached its most perfect form in Nizami's version and is celebrated in several world literatures, the story of Layla and Majnum began in the Arabian desert of the 7th century of the common era with the tragic, 'Udhri' love story of Qays ibn al-Midawwah and his beloved Layla. In this article, I will present a brief introduction to the concept of 'Udhri' love, an overview of the Majnum Layla story in early Arabic sources, in Persian literature, and finally, I will look at the story as it was developed into a Sufi allegory by Persian literati such as Nizami.

On the Meaning of Layla (Layli), Qays, Majnun, and of Madness

نَرْ جَهْلُكَارِ هُرَقَانِ مَلَكِيَّةِ
بَشَّاشَ حَرَقَانِ لَيَلِيَّةِ
In every heart there is an inclination to love her. Her tastes are like the night, and her name is Layli.⁴

Hakim Nizami Ganjavi.

With this verse, Nizami first introduces us to Layli, and, in the Persian versions the form of the name is indeed Layli and not the Arabic form Layla as we see from the rhyme of this verse where the name is rhymed with smiyh (inclination). Layli is among the girls studying alongside the boys (including Qays later to become Majnum) in the local madrasah or writing school. In the illustration on page 37 they can be seen sitting together on a carpet with their writing tablets (lawli) and the dakir-i daivishmaan, or teacher of writing and wisdom as Nizami calls him, seated to the right.
